The abdomen was much distended and there was active peristalsis of the small intestine, with much pain. Examination of the left groin revealed a sloughy cavity from which foul-smelling pus exuded. The patient was taken to the operating theater and anajsthetized, when a large mass of sloughing omentum was found in the cavity together with a small knuckle of intestine. The femoral ring was tightly blocked and nothing could be passed into the lumen of the bowel. The finger was therefore passed up to the ring just against Pouparts ligament and an incision carried upward from the cavity beyond the point of the finger. The incision was now gradually deepened over the point of the finger until Pouparts ligament was completely cut through. The tip of the index-finger could then be gradually passed into the bowel, and no interference whatever was needful with the adhesions...
