Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from On the Evidence of Accomplices This little Tract was written many years ago. It was occasioned by the appearance of an anonymous work on the same subject, in which the author lays down what he asserts to be the established practice; or rather, as he calls it, the fixed rule of evidence, as to the testimony of an accomplice, and the corroboration which it ought to receive, before the judge can permit it to go to the jury. The principles which the author maintains appears to me to be erroneous; and not supported by the cases which he cites. The cases appear to have been inaccurately stated; the decisions of the judges garbled and incorrectly given; whilst the author's deductions are inconsequent, and his arguments often contradictory. His work, however, being the only one exclusively on the subject, it circulated among the profession; and as few take the trouble of investigating subjects on which others have bestowed their time and attention, the opinions of the author of that work appeared to gain ground. It was to correct those believed-to-be erroneous opinions that the present work was undertaken. As it was conceived that in England the practice with respect to the admission of the testimony of accomplices was well understood, and uniformly followed, and that it was in Ireland alone that any uncertainty as to the rule, or diversity of opinion prevailed, this work was intended merely for the latter country; and the object of its author it was thought would be sufficiently attained by submitting the manuscript to the perusal of the then judges, and the heads of the profession; and this having been...
